"Well," said he very serlously, turnling to life desk, that came up to life eldn as he sat beside it, "go and write me an article almut rats." Would you advise"- I started to say, when he interrupted me. "The man that gives advice is a bigger fool than the man that takes it." he fleered impatiently. "Go and do your best." Before he had given me this injunc-tion he had diqued his pen and begun to write hurriedly. If I had known him longer I should have known that while he had been talking to me that tircless mind of his had sununoned him to its service. I went out in light spirits and sat down a moment on one of the benches in the little park near by to think it all over. He was going to measure my judgment, my skill as n writer, my resources, "Rats," I said to myself thoughtfully. I had read much about them. They infested the, ships, they overmn the wharfs, they traversed the sewers. An Inspiration came to me. I started for the water front, asking my way every block or two. Near the East river I met a po-Heemin a blg. husky, good hearted

"Can you tell me," I said, "who can give me information about rais?"

"Rats?" he repeated. "What d' ye wan' t' knew about thhu?"

'Everything," I said, "They've just You me a job on the New York Trib-ne," I added proudly.

Uncle Eb took no chances and refused everything that had a look of mystery and a suggestion of perli, dropping a droll remark betimes that sent a ripple of annisement around the table. John Trumbull sat opposite me, and even then I felt a curious interest in him-a big, full bearded man, quite six feet tall, his skin and eyes dark, lds hair frou gray, his voice deep like David's. I could not get over the impression that I lead seen him before a feeting I have had often fuelig non I could never possibly have met. No word came out of lds firm month unless he were addressed, and then all in hearing listemed to the little Le land to church with Hope, sny. It was never more than some very simple remark. In his face and form and voice there was abundant heraldry of rugged power and oxlike vitulity.

I have seen a bronze head of Danlel Webster, which, with a full beard and an ample covering of gray hair, would have given one a fairly perfect liles of the look of John Trumbuil. Imagine it on a tall and powerful body, and let it speak with a volce that has in its the deep and musical vibration one may hear in the looling of im ax, and you shall see as perfectly as my feelde words can help
